World War 2 – 1944

John Thompson Strategic analyst - quotes from his book "Spirit Over Steel"

Nov 13th: 3rd US Army continues to force the Germans back on the east side of the Moselle and 7th US Army drives into the high rocky hills and dense pine forests of the Vosges. The Germans evacuate Skopje as the Bulgarians draw near. US Carriers launch another raid near Luzon, sinking an IJN light cruiser and four destroyers.

Nov 14th: British troops launch offensives to clear up the west bank of the Maas and 1st French Army starts a drive on Belfort. The Norwegian Government in Exile announces that Norse forces are now fighting alongside the Soviets in the north of the country.

Nov 15th: 3rd Army makes some ground east of Metz as the Soviets close to 30km of Budapest. The small Island of Mapia north of New Guinea is wrested from the Japanese with little effort by US 31st Division. A week ago, S/Sgt Ruben Rivers of the Black American 761st Tank battalion, earned a Silver Star for his performance in his first time in combat. Today, he has a tank shot out from under him and, ignoring his wound, takes command of another tank for four days in the fighting around Guebling, France. On the fourth day, his company withdraws in the face of a German tank attack, but Rivers stays to cover their withdrawal and engages the Germans. He is killed when his tank is knocked out. He is awarded a posthumous Medal of Honor, although the award is only finally made in 1997.

Nov 16th: There is heavy air and artillery preparation for new attacks by 1st and 9th US Armies in the wooded hills of Germany's western frontier. One technique used by the 9th Army delivered mixed results on three occasions in Normandy, but now the tactics and technology exist to make it work without shredding the Allied troops poised on the start-line as 1,204 Allied heavy bombers deluge the German defences west of the Roer with 4,120 tons of bombs. Luftwaffe night-fighter ace Heinz-Wolfgang Schnaufer becomes one of only 27 German servicemen to win the full award of the Knights Cross with Oak Leaves, Swords and Diamonds for his many successes (121 by war's end) in shooting down Allied bombers.

Nov 17th: 1st, 3rd, 7th, 9th and 1st French Armies all make some headway today, but it is not easily done. Maintaining an offensive in thickly wooded hills on the French-German frontier during the rainy autumn months is very difficult and the Germans have learned every nuance of the defence in the last two years.

Nov 18th: Patton's 3rd Army finally enters Metz and British XXX Corps reinforces US 1st and 9th Armies near Aachen while Julich and Duren are captured.

Essential Reading: There are enough hagiographies of George S Patton about (and the ridiculous 1970 movie has much to answer for), but the hard-charging General ran smack into a brick wall in Alsace and Lorraine and could not easily bull his way through it. For those infected by the popular view of Patton, an inoculation can be delivered via John Nelson Rickard's 1999 study Patton at Bay: The Lorraine Campaign, September to December 1944.

Nov 19th: Metz is completely encircled; the French reach Belfort and Geilenkirchen is occupied as the autumn campaigns in the west continue. The Japanese lose a cruiser and three merchant ships to carrier raids in Manila Bay.

RUSI Presentation on Nov 13th Cancelled

Colleagues

Due to lack of response the presentation by Tim Laidler, scheduled from 5 to 7 pm on Wednesday, 13 November has been cancelled and postponed to a future suitable date and time.

We plan to invite Tim Laidler again, to outline how the University of BC will be a "Veteran Friendly Campus" in 2020, and re-schedule his presentation to follow a regular lunch at the Bessborough Armoury. We will keep you posted.

Thank you for your interest and support.

Wreck of WWII Submarine HMS Urge Found Off Malta

Pictures courtesy of the University of Malta, Francis Dickinson and the National Museum of the RN
The Maritime Executive 2019-11-02

The wreck of the Royal Navy submarine HMS Urge has been identified by marine archaeologists off Malta, solving a 77-year-long mystery. Sitting upright on the seabed of the Mediterranean in over 400 feet of water, her bow is buried in the ocean floor, her deck gun is facing forward.

She is the last resting place of 44 people. The distinctive features of the submarine have been compared with contemporary photographs and the undisclosed location of the wreck compared with official records to make the identification.

HMS Urge is one of 19 U-class submarines lost in World War II, 13 of them in the Mediterranean. The submarines were small and originally meant to be used purely for training. They proved highly capable with Urge, under Lieutenant Commander Edward Tomkinson, regarded among the best in the 10th Submarine Flotilla. Her crew and captain were highly decorated for a string of successes, dispatching a German tanker supporting U-boat operations in the Atlantic, crippling the Italian battleship Vittorio Veneto and sinking the Italian cruiser Bande Nere during 20 patrols.

Edward Tomkinson

HMS Urge left the island on her final mission on April 27, 1942 bound for Alexandria in Egypt as the 10th Submarine Flotilla moved its base to escape the Axis Powers' constant bombing of Malta. Aboard were not just her 32 crew, but 11 other naval personnel and a war correspondent. She never reached North Africa. The Admiralty concluded she ran into an enemy minefield shortly leaving the island, but the wreck was never found. That official assessment of her loss was put into question by one shipwreck hunter, who claimed to have found the Urge off the Libyan coast near Tobruk – far from her intended route – and supposedly sunk by Italian aircraft two days after departing Malta.

That fate – and location – has now been definitively ruled out by the combined efforts of Canadian naval researcher Platon Alexiades, Francis Dickinson – grandson of HMS Urge's commanding officer – and Professor Timmy Gambin of the University of Malta's Classics and Archaeology Department and a team of students, plus the Royal Navy's official historians. Their research confirms the original Admiralty estimate – the boat did indeed succumb to a mine laid by a German E-boat; the impact caused catastrophic damage and led to Urge plunging out of control to the seabed. Families of the crew, led by Tomkinson's daughter Bridget, are now hoping to erect a memorial on the island and attend a commemorative service next year to mark the tragedy and HMS Urge's rediscovery.

Legendary Carl Gustaf Took Major Step Towards New Upgrade

The 84mm Carl Gustaf recoilless rifle has remained among the most beloved weapons in infantry anti-tank arsenals for decades. Recently, the Army Times offered up a glimpse of brand-new laser-guided munitions engineered by Raytheon for the 84mm M3 Multi-Role Anti-Armor Anti-Personnel Weapon System (MMAAWS). The laser-guided Gustaf munition offers "a multi-target warhead capable of defeating bunkers, concrete, light skinned vehicles and armored personnel carriers and has a range of nearly 2,000 meters," Marine Corps Times reports, noting that the precision round provides flexibility for service members to fire from enclosures without fear of back blast. The new round is just the latest upgrade to the iconic system. The M3A1 variant developed by Swedish Carl Gustaf godfather Saab Dynamics AB offers a titanium shell designed to reduce system weight and length. The M3A1 variant also offers the capability to fire off multiple salvos of specialized rounds — like, say, Raytheon's laser-guided munition — in a departure from the one-and-done weapons like the AT-4 anti-tank system.

Now, after years of tweaking, everyone's favorite boomstick is picking up a serious update: laser-guided precision munitions. Swedish Carl Gustaf producer Saab Dynamics AB and US defense giant Raytheon have successfully conducted "a series of guided flight tests" of its new laser-guided munition, aptly called the Guided Carl-Gustaf Munition, the companies announced on Thursday. According to the companies, the new GCGM can reach out and hit both stationary and moving targets at a range of up to 2,000 meters, well beyond the existing effective firing ranges of its current munitions. "Three munitions were fired in total; two against static targets and one against a moving target," the companies said of the tests, which took place at the Mile High Range in Sierra Blanca, Texas, United States and at Saab Bofors Test Centre in Karlskoga, Sweden in late September. "A semi-active laser was used to guide the munitions to target impact," according to the statement. "Other seeker technologies (e.g. imaging IR) were also demonstrated as optional solutions for the final product."

First unveiled in 2018, Saab and Raytheon have billed the laser-guided Gustaf munition offers "a multi-target warhead capable of defeating bunkers, concrete, light skinned vehicles and armored personnel carriers" as Marine Corps Times put it at the time. The new munition comes on the heels of Saab's new M3E1 variant of the iconic recoilless rifle, which offers a titanium shell for reduced length and weight and the capability of firing off multiple salvos of specialized rounds compared to single-use weapons like the AT-4 anti-tank system that the new Gustaf is designed to replace. Those upgrades are coming to a squad near you sooner rather than later. In 2016, the Army vowed to deck out every infantry squad with an M3 Carl Gustaf, tripling its budget request for recoilless rifles in its fiscal year 2019 with the goal of picking up a total of 2,460 systems through fiscal 2023. Last year, a Raytheon representative told Army Times that only US Special Operations Command has an open requirement for a precision-guided Carl Gustaf round at this time. According to Military.com, Saab and Raytheon will have a chance to actually show off the system for Pentagon planners as soon as next spring

WWI Movie '1917'

Hunted by Snipers: How Director Sam Mendes' Hero Grandad Inspired the movie

Nov 11, 2019 George Winston

The film chosen for the 71st Royal Film Performance to be held on the 4th December, is 1917 a WWI drama directed by the great Sam Mendes. The film, 1917, is highly anticipated and expected to be a colossal money-earner. The film is based around the story of two young soldiers that are tasked with carrying a message across the lines to prevent 1,600 men walking into an ambush.

Making the story more poignant is the fact that the brother of one of the messengers is in the group that needs to be warned. The story that influenced Mendes to make this film came from listening to his grandfather, Alfred Mendes, tell stories of his life in the trenches during WWI. Alfred was awarded the Military Medal for bravery during his service in WWI.

Alfred recounted his wartime memoirs in his autobiography, Autobiography of Alfred H Mendes 1897-1991. In this fantastic book are stories of Alfred's courage, as well as the sexy romps in which he took part! Military records indicate that Mendes came to Britain in January 1916, and six months later, in June, he was enlisted into the 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade. The Brigade was posted to Oisemont, a small town near Dieppe in France where he was to train as a signaller. Alfred recounts how he did not want to be a signaller and would have preferred to qualify as a machine gunner, as he believed that would be of more use in the war.

Alfred was then posted to Passchendaele, an area pockmarked by shell craters that was both depressing and dangerous. At dawn on 12 October 1917, the British troops were sent to the Passchendaele Ridge to protect the village of Poelcappelle. It was dreadful weather with the rain pouring down, and the attack ended in disaster, with almost a third of the soldiers killed. The rest were left strewn across the brutal WWI battlefield in water-filled craters. The only way to find out where everyone was, was to send messengers to each crater in no-man's land to find them and pass on instructions. When the commanding officer asked for volunteers to undertake this hazardous mission, Alfred stepped forward. As he left the safety of the trenches, the rain stopped, making him a clear target for German snipers and machine gunners. Soon bullets were whizzing past his head. Alfred believed that the Germans were a little disconcerted at seeing a lone man wandering around in no-man's land, perhaps thinking that he was crazy. They then made little effort to actually hit him.

He located many of the survivors. After braving the gauntlet of enemy fire, he arrived safely back at the headquarters trench of C Company. Alfred was fond of recounting the story of his two wet, muddy, terrifying days in WWI in no-man's land where he stumbled into a German pillbox manned by ten German soldiers; all of whom surrendered to him! It was for these two days that Alfred was awarded the Military Cross. This episode was the apparent basis for the film that his grandson, Sam, would make. In the film, the action takes place in France just after the Germans retreated to the Hindenburg Line at the time of Operation Alberich. Two young British soldiers, Schofield, played by George MacKay and Blake, played by Dean-Charles Chapman, are tasked with carrying a message that warns of an ambush. The British battalion of 1,600 men, one of whom is Blake's brother, must be notified, but they are on the other side of enemy lines, so the mission is fraught with danger. Included in the star-laden cast are Benedict Cumberbatch, Andrew Scott, Claire Duburcq, Mark Strong, Richard Madden, and Colin Firth. The film will be released to the public on Christmas Day in the USA and on 10th January in Europe.

Who (or What) Is It?

Last Week: It is an Auster MK VI, tail number "582" piloted on 24 April 1953, by then Capt Peter Tees (his dad, Brig Tees, was long associated with 15th Field/Coast Bde between the wars). Capt Chick Sills (later LCol Sills) is flying as a passenger with Peter and acting as the "bombardier". The occasion is 1RCHA's departure from Korea. Peter being the tiger he was, decided to provide an appropriate send off for the regiment. Rolls of toilet paper were ejected out the side window of the aircraft at low level by "bombardier" Sills apparently with great accuracy. The rolls unfurled as they fell, and the streamers bounced and criss-crossed the vehicles in the convoy. In Peters words "the Horse Gunners had been properly donked". The account can be found in Canada's Flying Gunners, page 210.

This Week: For the second week in a row, we feature an aeroplane (and another flying machine on the tarmac to one side). This one, unlike last week's, belongs to our mighty neighbour to the south. No, not El Salvador, it's the United States of America. That we are close military partners now is a given, but this has not always been the case, as keen historians and history buffs can attest. It wasn't so long ago that Canada had a war plan involving the invasion of the land of the doodles (as our 19th century predecessors often called them). This plan, “Defence Scheme No. 1”, might have actually worked, given that it relied on the might of the Imperial Forces. However, that is another story.

This week’s story involves those who fly. Many of you have done so, and others maintain an interest in ships that fly. Given that, can you identify the two flying machines in the photo, and who flew them? As a bonus, can you identify the base? Our sole hint is that it hasn’t existed for over fifty years. Note the date on the photo: 1961.

The Liberation of Holland celebrations in Canada and Metro Vancouver in 2020

The Liberation of Holland in 1945 was brought about primarily by the Canadians, a monumental struggle of service and sacrifice in the pursuit of democracy & freedom. Canadians signed up from across our country, joining forces to sail across the Atlantic Ocean to liberate a people they did not know. As many Dutch people of that generation will say, "thank God they came." Meanwhile, back in Canada, the Dutch royal family found refuge in Ottawa, where Princess Margriet was born in 1943.

The Dutch people have never forgotten the Canadian liberators. Each spring the Dutch government sends 100,000 tulips to Ottawa, a heartfelt gesture gesturing an unbroken friendship. Now, 75 years later, there will be a number of celebrations to mark the 75th anniversary of the liberation of Holland, and this enduring connection between our two nations. Consul-General Henk Snoeken in Vancouver will share with us the activities that will take place in Metro Vancouver to mark this special anniversary.

Speaker's biography

Henk Snoeken is Consul-General of the Kingdom of the Netherlands in Vancouver. He had various positions in Dutch ministries, from which the latest were: Deputy Director for National Spatial Planning (2010-2014) and Deputy Director for International Relations (2014-2018) at the Ministry of Infrastructure and the Environment. As a policymaker he has been working in the field of spatial planning, water management, logistics and sustainability. In the field of international relations his focus was on climate policy, public-private cooperation and economic diplomacy.
